The simplesthypothesis he can admit is that the particle of oxygen is formed of two atoms, arranged thus: OO; and ozone of three atoms, arranged thus: OD, O. In that supposition ozone would contain the usual volume of common oxygen; tranted with indide of petassium, it would lose one atom without changing its volume, and, on being decomposed by heat, it would undergo an expansion of half its volume. Hence its theoretical density ought to be one and a bail times that of exygen. that is 1-658.
